That First Tracks Feeling

The first tracks after a storm always carry a certain kind of magic. This latest system did just that - resetting the entire midwinter mood. With a combination of 12+ inches of snow delivered straight from Mother Nature and our Snowmakers' handywork, the slopes are smooth and floaty with a crisp, clean base underneath, keeping us all on edge. It's the kind of snow that floats us down the mountain and has even grown adults giggling into their neck gaiters (no judgement, we've been there, done that).

This winter refresh has us putting away our sunglasses and embracing the powder in search of that first tracks feeling. It's the time of the season where winter remembers what it is, and reminds us why we love it. If you haven't made it out yet, consider this your friendly nudge.

The mountain is in a generous mood - lean in while it lasts.
