Into The Blue

There's no telling what you'll find when you head out into the blue. Of course, there's the sunshine, the sparkle on the water, and the undeniable happiness that comes with the combination of those things, but there's more than meets the eye. Just beyond the surface, whether through legend or fact, whispers of a Lake Monster float by, and apparently, this creature has called Deep Creek Lake home since its creation in 1925.

As summer settles in, we feel a pull toward everything blue. The lure of the lake far outweighs the lore of the lake monster, keeping us in tune to the suddenly beachy, sun-soaked air around town. Lately, every moment feels like lunchtime and every day a Saturday, pulling us toward lake time and away from routine - and how could you possibly blame us?

We're fully embracing the summer feeling that arrives when the trees are greener, the water is more vivid, and there's something musical about the wind in the mountains. Everyone knows that life is better at the lake, and we couldn't possibly agree more, except we might add that it's much better on Maryland's Mountaintop.
