SEND IT

Many things can take on a double meaning. Take the phrase send it.

For some, fall means trading the workweek routine for quiet, crisp mornings, changing leaves, and any excuse to get outside. Send it might mean leaving work early to catch the fleeting daylight, or convincing yourself that it's definitely not too cold for one more story around the fire pit. For others, it means a round at Lodestone after a long week in the office. A chance to reconnect with the greens, take the scenic route, and ease into the weekend. Maybe send it is the swing you take on 17, hoping your ball makes it to the other side of the rock formation.

For all of us, send it is a mantra for getting our ski legs ready to do their job. Think about that first run after the first chair of the season. You push off from the top, pointing your skis downhill, maybe feeling a little nervous. Your legs are shaking in your ski boots. You're sitting a little farther back in the seat than you will after a few warm-up laps. Then you hear it in your head: send it.
